

AP Humanities 11
(AP Lang & AP US History)

The AP Humanities 11 course is designed to teach the students AP US History and AP English Language & Composition with an emphasis on the overlapping and cross-curricular content and themes in American history and its literature. We believe that the absolute best way to teach American history and American literature (with a focus on the study of rhetoric) is in combination and connection with each other because American literature is the narrative of our country's history. The course allows for several cross-curricular and joint projects (usually these projects allow for the students to earn concurrent grades in both English and History) throughout the school year that call upon students to demonstrate and enhance their use of multiple intelligences. This course appeals to the eleventh grade honors student who is passionate about both English and US History and enjoys the challenges of the AP curriculum.
